

UNIT 6: SOLVING PROBLEMS

Conflicts

People have different opinions and often don't agree with each other. If we were robots, we would get on with everyone and nothing would surprise us. However, we are lucky and can think freely and see things in different ways.

We learn from each other, but sometimes it is difficult to see the positive aspects of our differences. Even when people think the same way as we do, we can consider them rivals or enemies. This is how conflicts arise.

It is inevitable that people have their differences. Some animals have conflicts, even if they are the same species, but what is unique to humans is that we can resolve our conflicts amicably, without using violence.

1. Write down the names of any animals you know that fight each other.

2. Why do you think animals fight?

3. Can you think of any reasons why humans have conflicts?
